Vaccinated a Medium.
Taking people unawares has been one of the features of the work now being done by Dr. Doty, of the Bureau of Cen-tagious Diseases, to check the spread of smallpox in New York. None of the happenings that he could detail would stand out more humorously, however, than that which befell himself and party in an east side house on Thursday night.

His knock at the door of the two story frame in question brought out a sard faced young man whose attempt at ulterior motives provoked the doctor to make an abrupt demand like this:

"I want to vaccinate all persons in this house; let me in."

"For the spirits' sake, don't," answered the young man. "Madam's got them all out of the cabinet and they were never so much at home. Please come to-morrow night, or you'll frighten them so badly they will never return."

Dr. Doty asked if he could not join the circle by paying the stipulated amount. He and his party were readily accepted when several coins were forthcoming. They were ushered into a darkened room in time to see a general scampering of white forms toward a green looking box. Then there was a distressing flash of bright lights and a scream from the medium. She was clad in a continuous garment that hooded her head, and she resembled, not a little, one of the ethereal beings who had taken such a decided dislike to the visitors.

Her face wore an agonized expression.
"You have persecuted them," she screamed. "They have gone back to their tombs unconfessed. Ling, Parsons, Spies and Fielden were all here, and now they have fled. You are an enemy to anarchy!"

Dr. Doty did not wish to deny this assertion. What ever his thoughts on the subject might have been he retained a creditable sense of the purpose of his visit and inquired: "Have they been vaccinated?"

"Who?" shrilly rejoined the female.
"Why, they are spirits." Saying this she threw up her arms and lapsed into a state of trance.

The Chief of the Bureau was out with his case of knives in an instant.

Feeling the woman's pulse he found it vigorous. Looking at her arms he ascertained they were unvaccinated. A spot the size of a nickel five cent piece was made raw on her upper left arm and then the virus was applied. During the ordeal the medium was motionless.

Presently the medium bounded in the air like a rubber ball.

"Where's my patron?" she demanded.
"I mean the person who ordered this service. She owes for it. If she don't pay for it you will."

The woman was assured that each of the inspectors present had paid his admittance fee at the door and that her customer, who was responsible for the major portion of the evening's entertainment, had likely made her escape through a side exit. There was a bound of sombre hue lying on the floor, which caught the medium's eye. She made a dive for it, and declared that she would hold it until redeemed by the owner, who, she said, was the individual much wanted. Dr. Doty indicated to the woman where he had marked her with his lancet, and she confessed surprise that the vaccination had been performed.

"I was totally unconscious of what you did," she said, when in a calmer mood. "Perhaps it will do me good.
I make a specialty of calling up spirits of dead anarchists. Each week I bring them before me by request of those of that persuasion. When you came in I had the four hanged anarchists of Chicago conversing glibly. I will never be so successful again."

As the medium shows signs of relaps-ing into another trance the inspectors made haste to visit the adjoining house.
